"I started this all with the intention of being the best player I could be. I was seven, eight, nine years old, just watching my idols." At the time of writing, Andrés Iniesta's sixth European Cup triumph remains not only the most memorable of his career, but also one of the biggest individual successes in the history of Spanish football. In the years since, life has not been easy for the 33-year-old. Injury has limited him and, for some, given his persona the ring of truth. However, Iniesta is now a part of the fabric of Barcelona. "There is an importance to being known," he said. "To have a name and to be recognised. It has changed my life. "In a society that is so different, it is important to have a name and that people know the person you are. You're not just a name, you're a person that has a history, and in the end, it's about the quality of your life. "That's what I want for myself. Not to be with fame, but to be a person with whom people are happy. I am not here for fame
